The Challenge

In the wake of the pandemic and global shifts in work styles, tech company Bumble needed to rethink its London HQ to support dramatic changes in the way its teams were collaborating. The plan was to replace a dense layout of desks with a fun, flexible space that could adapt to workers' changing needs, positioning Bumble as a forward-thinking company focused on the well-being of its staff.

The Result

DThree transformed the space into a warm, inviting hive of productivity. Bumble's golden brand color suffuses the environment, linking rooms together, while honeycomb patterns repeat on the backsplash and ceiling panels and organic shapes in seating and accent tables help the space feel welcoming and approachable. A sectional and easy-to-move chairs, some equipped with built-in tablet arms, let workers reconfigure their space on the fly to meet changing needs, break into teams, or enhance social distancing. The curved café counter creates an appealing space for employees to gather, refill, and refresh before their next task.

Materials

Durasein's Duostone was chosen for the counter tops in Bumble's busy café due to its smooth and seamless surface. It provides a clean and hardworking focal point, complementing the café's other design elements such as golden honeycomb tile, bespoke joinery, walnut lacquer, and booth seating pods honey-colored upholstery.
