Acing the Assignment with Padium

“As soon as I showed the client samples, they were immediately certain that they wanted to use the product”

The Challenge

Padium was launching the UK’s first premium club for padel, an indoor paddle sport rocketing to popularity. Their 30,000 square-foot facility would house indoor eight courts, a pro shop, a juice bar, changing rooms, and a luxury players’ lounge overlooking the arena. The client was looking for a fresh, upscale, and vibrant look, but the surfaces needed to stand up to heavy use and frequent cleaning while scoring high in health and hygiene.

The Result

Matt Constantinou, founder of Orca Studios, suggested Durasein solid surface because he had used it in other projects and knew he could depend on it to be durable, sustainable, easy to fabricate, and cost-effective. “As soon as I showed the client samples, they were immediately certain that they wanted to use the product,” he says.

“[Durasein Solid Surface] is durable, sustainable, malleable, slick, on a short lead time and cost-effective.”

– Matt Constantinou

Materials

They specified Durasein Icy Grey for the juice bar, contrasting its lightly streaked and grained look with white subway tiles behind the bar, a darker metal grate on the front of the counter, and a neon sign to keep the space feeling fresh and bright. Durasein Luna was used for the changing room counters and the thermoformed restroom sinks, creating smooth, seamless surfaces that resist scratches and mildew and are easy for the staff to maintain throughout the flow of athletes clamoring for a space on the court or cooling off at the juice bar.

Durasein in Healthcare

From a performance standpoint, Durasein solid surface is all about durability, food safety, and hygiene. But from an appearance perspective, it's pure eye candy. That combination is what makes it so well suited for hospitality environments, where its beauty, growing color palette, and ease of fabrication free designers to create stylish, distinctive spaces where people want to be, all while maintaining the strictest health and safety codes for visitors. From hospitality to many other markets, see what's possible with Durasein.
